May 2020- COVID-19 thoughts

Here we all are, hoping the next two weeks will bring us different news as our entire world endures this rare pandemic event.

Hopefully, we all will soon start to see our lives become a little more normal than it has been over these recent weeks. I can't wait to go out with girlfriends for a meal and drinks, and to celebrate a few birthdays that have come and gone since the middle of March.

Many of us have been stuck at home looking at the same four walls for several weeks. Let's just think of our time now as being very precious and memorable.

Plus, there may be a few more organizing projects that you might want to complete before we are all able to again enjoy somewhat of a "normal life" — because once we get the taste of freedom, we won't want to be stuck indoors any longer, am I right?

Here are a few projects that I have shared in my past newsletters. Plus, you can find more at my website www.LogicalPlacement.com if interested. You'll find several topics at the bottom of the page, if you wish to do further research, including:

- Organize Your Linen Closet
- Organize Your Recipes
- Organizer Your Medicine Closet
- Organize Your Closet
- Organize Your Kitchen
- Organizer Your Pantry
- Organize Your Final Wishes
- Organize Your Closet - looks like this weekend, we will be in the 60's!

I know a lot of families are doing much more cooking at home these days, so by organizing your recipes, you can see what you would still be interested in making. And, keep in mind you may still need to substitute some ingredients for others, but be a little adventurous!

Also get members of your family involved. With my college kids at home, they have been given the weekly task to cook a dinner of their choice for the family. This is ensuring they are practicing some life skills as well, right? Plus Mom and Dad get the night off. It's a win-win for everyone.

I hope you and your family a safe return come May 15th — and, in the meantime, stay safe and healthy.

And when we're living more normal lives once again, please let me know what organizing project you did during this time!

Your local professional organizer,
Betty Huotari
